

Recognizing that members of the Lehman community may sometimes make statements or publish opinions that others may find controversial, and that inquiries about such statements/opinions may be submitted to college offices such as the Department of Media Relations & Publications, the Lehman College Academic Freedom Committee and the Lehman College Senate assert that official College responses to such inquiries should be guided by the Lehman College Statement on Academic Freedom (available on the Lehman College website), and by the following wording:

Lehman College is deeply committed to upholding the values of Academic Freedom, and does not attempt to control the personal opinions, or the public expression of the opinions, of any member of the Lehman community. Public colleges have an important role in society as institutions where novel and even controversial ideas can be proposed, tested, and debated by members of the community. [Name] does not speak for Lehman College, however the College will continue to assert vigorously the rights of all members of the Lehman community to publish and discuss their ideas freely, within the law.